ColoSpace Deploys Procera Appliances

July 14, 2005 -- (WEB HOST INDUSTRY REVIEW) -- Network security system vendor Procera Networks (proceranetworks.com) announced on Thursday that colocation and managed services provider ColoSpace (colospace.com) is deploying its OptimIP intelligent network appliance systems in its Boston-area data center.

Procera's OptimIP intelligent network appliance provides a transparent application-oriented networking overlay to ColoSpace's Cisco network infrastructure. It enables ColoSpace to rate limit and cap bandwidth on a per-application and per-use basis, giving customers the ability to allocate certain amounts of network capacity to specific tasks.

Procera says its equipment enables ColoSpace to offer services compliant with Sarbanes-Oxley regulations and open new sources of revenue that would otherwise require additional infrastructure.

"Procera's OptimIP provides us with unique application-oriented networking capabilities to secure and provision shared infrastructure for our customers including the Boston Celtics and leading organizations in the high-tech, healthcare and financial services industries," says Aaron Sawchuk, CTO of ColoSpace. "Procera enables us to offer an essential security, auditing and control overlay without disrupting our existing Cisco infrastructure. This enables our enterprise customers to implement disaster recovery operations that adhere to the SAS 70 standard in compliance with SOX 404 audit requirements and take advantage of our 100 percent uptime service level agreement with full confidence in the security of their outsourced services. Our customers are delighted to discover that they can meet their regulatory requirements and still manage costs effectively."
